

It's no secret that generational wealth exists in the home service industry.

The secret is figuring out a way to go about tapping into it.

It always felt like there was something different between myself and rich people.

I've managed to prove myself wrong with that in recent years.

The greatest misconception is that you must do blue collar work.

It's important to realize that all you have to do is connect the dots.

Manual labour forces you to perpetually trade time for money.

It requires a variety of overheads, picking up trades in the first place, and being available for the tasks at hand.

This means that you're diving into things headfirst, your earning potential is delayed by years, and your income is capped by location.

Dropservicing gives you the opportunity to provide value in exchange for money.

It comes down to letting the subcontractor do their thing, introducing the customer to the professional, and running storefronts across the globe.

The result is that you're putting nothing down, you profit off the supply-demand gap, and your success is tied to expansion.

I'm hosting a free live masterclass where I'll be teaching everything that goes into this.
